

Contagion as a film is more than accurate in terms of depicting the situation around a virus and how it is affecting all the people around it. For instance, the officials were shown to have a major indication of what to do in order to better handle the situation. The accuracy that it demonstrated and displaying the spread comes from Hong Kong to London and then towards the United State. To add on, the multiple points of view of different characters are shown to the audience that shows how the virus is not always the same towards everyone since it can be affecting everyone on a whole different scale. One clear example can be how the husband of Beth went on a whole process to stop the spread of the virus to enlarge since he had some sort of immunity to it. At the same time, you had the point of view of a medical official in Orantes to show the audience the people that handle the virus as their job. How unpredictable life can be is shown when the doctor gets infected with the disease which eventually leads to his death and comes to show how even the most knowledgeable people in a topic can get the worst outcome in certain situations. The film also did a very good job in demonstrating how serious the situation was despite the drama that was added since it is a movie made to have suspense. It is important for someone like me, a student of the sciences since we are literally living through a pandemic and need some type of orientation for what to expect with all the uncertainties in hand.
