In the past year that the pandemic has been in our lives, the public and health professionals have not seen eye-to-eye with the required guidelines proposed to keep them safe. The public believes that there was no clear sense of direction given by the health officials regarding the coronavirus. The pivotal example of the situation would be former President Trump and how he disagreed with Dr. Fauci who is the director of infectious diseases of the United States. As soon as the disease arrived in the United States, Trump did not take it seriously since he did not implement social distancing or the need to wear masks to be safe to the public and many of his supporters followed his beliefs as they blindly trusted him. A few months later and the United States would become the leading country in cases recorded and deaths recorded due to the coronavirus. Furthermore, most elected officials we're not in sync with the message they had for the public which would normally cause a sense of confusion and panic in public since they do not know who to follow and who not to during such hard times. Oppositely, the nation of Vietnam handled things much more differently since the results showed zero deaths reported. Their authorities from the very first case that was reported, treated it with the utmost importance as the most urgent case in the nation to solve. To add on, they were all very clear with everything they said to that the public with clear directions on how to stay safe a return to normal life faster. Solutions such as a large lockdown so people don't go out and risk infecting or getting infected by anyone on the streets. Not to also mention that Vietnam also told them to wear masks no matter what right away and not vague statements like in the United States.
